RALPH RUCCI

“I TRY TO BE IN MYSELF, WITH MYSELF.”

PHOTOGRAPH BY ANNE HILLMAN

THE INTERVIEW

MODERN COUTURIER

Ralph Rucci thrives on pushing the limits of what fabric can do. He's explored the boundaries of his craft and gone above typical constraints to create an aesthetic that's utterly Rucci. Using the world's most luxe materials, exacting embroidery techniques and intricately complex architectural structure in his creations, he's the only American ever invited to join Paris' prestigious Chambre Syndicale de la Haute Couture. Rucci is a man of many inspirations, who, in turn, inspires many with his innovative and exploratory creative energy. The passion he has for his work is palpable, the results are magical, and his following is loyal.

How do you get inspired to design? ¶ I think about the rooms that people wear the clothes in. The rooms they inhabit and visit. How these rooms are decorated. I love looking at the work of interior decorators especially Lorenzo Mondrandino, Peter Marino, Harry Samuel, and, of course the great work from Pauline de Rothschild.

How do you apply that perspective to the women you dress? ¶ I'm always in search of characteristics of women: poise, the way they hold their heads, their wrists, the way they walk, smoke, drink. I could do a whole collection based on the wrist—and I have!

You named your company Chado after the Japanese tea ceremony. Why? ¶ I attribute it to past lives there. The Japanese sensibility is so centered and I find it very relaxing. I try to meditate as much as I can. I try to be in myself, with myself. It's that Buddhist way of thinking.

What else helps you decompress? ¶ I love being home. My apartment is a sanctuary. I'm having some work done at my apartment now: it's going to look like a scholar's opium den in China.

What are a few of your favorite things? ¶ Things I've collected over the years that mean something to me, in no particular order: I have a Khmer statue that's over five feet tall, my Cy Twombly suite means so much to me because it's just a pure statement of his scribbling. My books—my apartment is just consumed with books. Elsa Peretti objects, her silver bowls and this jade green cigarette box she made. I keep files of all the beautiful notes people send to me. There's lots of statuary in my apartment, and it's almost all 6th and 7th century Chinese.

I have one large Egyptian fragment that's the Sun King's afterlife protector; I hand-carried it back from Paris in my carry-on many years ago.

What is it about statues? ¶ They pull you in and they purify your space. Pieces of art that are so old bring with them purity, strength and empowerment—they create a serene church-like atmosphere. I'm drawn to the idea that there's this enormous piece of rock that's hand carved centuries ago.

Who would you like to paint you? ¶ Cy Twombly!

What are some of your favorite spots in New York? ¶ I love restaurant life. Il Cantinori, Sistina, La Grenouille, the Four Seasons, and Prune in the East Village.

What are some of your eccentricities? ¶ I can't make my schedule unless I'm holding a certain pen. I need to have that brown alligator checkbook cover otherwise I don't like the ceremony of writing checks. I put an article about an obscure woman from Pennsylvania in the same folder as images from Jean Paul Gaultier's collection so in four years, if I have to look at something from Gaultier, and I find her picture, it makes life more interesting. I plant little surprises for myself.

You're also a visual artist. You've had a couple of solo shows of your artwork. ¶ Yes. It's an activity much like confronting yourself through therapy. Your canvas is your coworker in this psychological activity and there is really no judgment. You get to go anywhere in your mind and you don't have to think about its worth, its resale value. For me it's therapeutic and almost psychosexual—the physicality of it. I do it late at night when no one's here.
